The effect of the recombinant cytokines IL-2, IL-4, and IL-10 on in vitro activation of human natural killer cells and on the survival of nude mice bearing human tumors. We report that the natural killer (NK) cells of peripheral blood leukocytes (PBL) from adults and newborns are activated in vitro by the interleukins (IL) IL-2 and IL-4 and inhibited by IL-10. IL-2 induced NK cells to express high levels of the natural cytotoxicity receptors NKp30 and NKp44 and to show an increase in cytotoxic activity. IL-2 also induced both antibody-dependent cellular cytotoxicity (ADCC) and IL-2 dependent growth. In contrast, the antibody dependent cellular phagocytosis (ADCP) was not affected by IL-2. IL-4 was shown to enhance NK cell expression of NKp30 and NKp44, but to inhibit the cytotoxic activity and ADCC activity. IL-4 also promoted the IL-2 dependent growth of PBL. IL-10 was shown to decrease NK cell expression of NKp30 and NKp44, but to have no effect on the cytolytic activity of NK cells. This cytokine also induced the survival of nude mice bearing a subcutaneous tumor cell line (MKN-7) at 10(5 4bc0debe42
