Q: MYSQL: group by column value I have a table where the field is Date,ID and time. Each row represents a different ID and Date/Time combination. What I need is a query that looks at the time field for each ID and group them by that ID Essentially I need to say something like this: SELECT group_by(ID) FROM table So it will basically do this: For each ID in the table, look at the time field and see if that is the same time for the ID. If it is, group them together. If not, ignore this one. Is this possible? A: You can use a window function to get an cumulative count of "current" group members, filtered by id and time. Use an initial count of 1 and then use a subquery to check for a match: select id, min(time) as time, max(time) as max_time from (select t.*, row_number
